

Benefits of Hiring Veterans

Every day, service members are trusted with immense responsibilities. The military trains service members to lead by example; they learn skills like motivation and delegation in the most hostile environments imaginable.

When soldiers leave their military careers, they often seek employment in the civilian world. Some employers are reluctant to hire retired service members, so veterans may find it difficult to find a job in the regular workforce.

How are our soldiers – individuals who've made extraordinary sacrifice and who've received some of the most sophisticated training and leadership experience available – not returning home to the job security and stability for which we've led them to believe they're fighting for all along? And how are businesses still struggling to find good talent when it appears to be abundant? Part of the problem is due to employer misconception –some companies actually believe that Veterans' experience can be too military.

Organizations that do hire veterans enjoy a number of advantages. Click on the links below for two great articles that talk about the benefits of a Veterans Hiring Program.
